button is pushed or not for some distance.

Children who are close behind this lawn mower -- which are close behind this lawn mower will continue to be cut and sometimes killed.

A Springfield man buys this lawn mower in 2005 and takes it home to use it in his family yard. He does not read the operator's manual. He does not pay attention to the graphics that are down here where your feet go. He levels the family yard, puts in grass, and has got, in 2006, a lawn that needs cutting.

So it's now May 2006. It's a nice day. Springfield family home. Family, relatives, have dinner together, and the man's wife and sister-in-law and his mother decide to go out to the movies. The older kids have other plans. The younger children are going to stay in the house and watch a movie on DVD. Still light out. The man decides to mow his lawn.

He leaves the children inside watching the DVD with his nine-year-old nephew in charge. He's mowing his back yard. As he comes up, he comes up to a fence. There's a fence over here. He comes up to the fence, and he needs to reposition. And according to what we're told, at least, he stops.
He's got his right hand on the lawn mower's steering wheel. He's looking forward. With his left hand, he's pushing the little yellow button on the dash, and we're told he starts backing up before he looks behind him.

Apparently after he starts backing up, he's looking over his right shoulder, because he says shortly after he starts backing up, he sees his nephew on his right waving frantically at him with his arms. Without knowing it, the man's little two-year-old daughter has gotten out of the house to his left and come up behind the lawn mower.

We're told that she tries to stand up on the back of the lawn mower -- now, this is not exactly -- this is -- I'm just trying to show kind of how that looks -- a child that tries to get on the back of a lawn mower.

She cannot hold on when it starts to back up (inaudible) backed up. As you all know already, it cuts off her left leg.

The little girl is Isabelle. That's what she looked like some years ago. This is Isabelle here now. She is one of about 25,000 Americans who was injured by riding lawn mowers that year.